

Special Topics Teachers Guide

Use these collections as a guide while creating lesson plans, sharing the collections with colleagues, or sharing the link to a specific resource with your students.

To find the link you can share with families, students, or colleagues, click on the word LINK in the review, and the purple box will open with the link to the direct page.

The screenshot shows a resource review for "Digital Storytelling Resources" by TeachersFirst. It includes a "SHARE" button and a "LINK" button circled in red. Below the review, a purple box contains a text input field with the URL "http://www.teachersfirst.com/single.cfm?id=18111" and a "CLOSE LINK" button.

Getting the Most out of a Collection

Let's look at an example. Perhaps you are going to share the Free Image Resources collection with students when looking for images to use with a project. You'd click on the link and share it as described above.

The screenshot shows a resource review for "Free Image Resources" by TeachersFirst. It includes a "SHARE" button and a "LINK" button. The review text mentions "digital citizenship" and "image usage".

Within this collection note that when you open the PixCove entry the description provides tags at the bottom with images (249), and photography (129)

The screenshot shows search results for "PixCove" by PixCove. It includes a "LINK" button circled in red. The description text at the bottom includes the tag "tag(s): images (249), photography (129)", with both "images (249)" and "photography (129)" circled in red.

These additional options are helpful if the 30 (or less) resources shared on the Special Topic page aren't what you are looking for.

Our Special Topic collections continue to grow, so please check back often to view the newly added pages. We hope that these collections can help make finding resources a bit easier and save you time as you plan your lessons for your class.
